

Clean-energy news is on the way soon.

And why I haven't posted an article for weeks.

This backyard vegetable gardener was happily mobile last month.

This month, not so much.

I'm sorry that a July 10 accident involving a stack of building materials has derailed me from weekly posts on Substack. For now.

So frustrating to not be able to spend much time at my computer. It would be a favorable time for that, because air quality (BC's wildfire smoke outside) is keeping everyone in my city indoors anyway.

Realistically, I expect another month of healing to get me back to the weekly rhythm as well as to the joy of raising vegetables.

However, I've been working at a certain clean-energy news report, bit by bit, for several weeks and hope to have that story out to you early next week.

Please keep the positive picture in mind; your thoughts can help the healing.
