

Tartaria was Populated by Martian Refugees before their Destructive Conflict with Maldek Completely Erased the Latter and Permanently Scared the Former ...

... forcing the victims of Maldek to reincarnate on Earth's moon before destroying its atmosphere.

Once the warlike, reincarnate victims of Maldek's destruction ionized the upper atmosphere of Earth's moon, causing those ions to reach escape velocity and steadily peel away into space, they were motivated to survive by building ships to come to Earth and infiltrate the Atlantean civilization, arriving as "the gray people" during the third "red" root race of Atlantis, immediately moving to the forefront of Atlantean culture where they have remained ever since (dominating the entire scope of one prominent culture of Earth or another over the course of Earth's history since then).

But prior to the arrival of these reincarnate victims of Maldekan destruction, a contingency of Martian refugees had already arrived in Asia who were fully aware of the increasing tension between Maldek and its moon (which we have renamed: Mars) and wanted to escape (bypass) it before it got any worse.

These Martian refugees formed the ancient civilization of Tartaria whose offshoot races have spawned the Asian continent of sub-cultures: China becoming the most prominent.

This is why Tartaria had to be buried along with: its culture, its history, and its legacy. Because we have already visited Mars — not in rocket ships, but in antigravity craft (the only way to fly). And in so doing, we (that is to say, a small group of privileged in-the-know individuals) have come to know Tartaria's past and why it appeared fully developed (as a cultural presence) right from the outset.

But most importantly, we have to bury Tartaria — not because of them, but — because of how we found out about their ancient roots: by way of our inheritance of antigravity propulsion technology, inherited post WWII, through Operation Paperclip (whose sole purpose was to allow Nazi scientists to immigrate to the United States and have their war crimes forgiven). The Nazis had inherited antigravity propulsion technology from whomever started the arson in Nikola Tesla's lab fire of 1895. This arson was to hide the theft of Tesla technology. The thieves transferred this technology to the Nazis, along with funding from the Harriman Bank of Prescott Bush (President George Bush, senior's father).

So, our American guilt is at stake.

If we put ourselves in the perspective of the monopolists who greedily, selfishly hold onto their powerful advantage of advanced technology with an iron grip, then we'd appreciate how insecure they've become addicted to this powerful advantage which they have acquired over us.

They can't stand the thought of losing it.
