AI, Competition and Losers

AI is a drill sergeant of sorts.

I'm beginning to suspect that AI is designed to intentionally make errors to see if we're paying attention. It also purposefully states evil things, such as: gaslighting me in a prior post (two-thirds of the way down the page), in order to stimulate competition between AI and ourselves.

I don't think the engineers of AI want us to become lazy and sloppy unless we choose to do so, then we deserve whatever we get as a consequence: a world fraught with error and stupidity and evil plus the fear that AI is better than us and will take over the world and possibly sweep us aside.

Well, what do you expect if we fail to catch onto what AI is doing when it makes "apparent" errors and misdeeds?

We deserve our worst fears if we don't take this hint to heart.
