I don't usually like to recommend movies. But this sci-fi movie involves a little bit of AI discussion and what potential it has for social impact. So, I think it's worth including it here.

An ordinary earthling is apprehended at random and taken to a mysterious distant planet to stand trial for the fate of planet earth.

HINT: There are several episodes of the "First Generation" of Star Trek (starring William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, etc) which deals with one of the questions which this movie poses to its audience. So, if you're an original "trekkie" from the 60s era, you'll like this movie.

BUT A MILD WARNING: It's not filled with action, nor with adventure. It's a slow burn. So, grab a warm mug of something, put up your feet, and relax. This is a philosophical piece which questions what we hold dear.
