The Psychology of Maldek

I don't know if I mentioned this before now, but my hunch is that Maldek became collectively nuts (insane) from having exploded too many nuclear tests depositing and distributing a blanket of nuclear material across their entire planet sufficient to expose their population to too much radiation. This had the effect of damaging their mental stability. Hence, they began to worship their abusive exercise of power for power's sake with no sensitivity for its consequences.

I share in that insanity. It's innate in my psyche.

But there's one caveat to that. And that is that if we raise our consciousness, then we won't be able to accomplish anything which could harm ourselves or anyone else.

That's a comforting thought.

As a side note, if you want to peer into the lifestyle of Maldek, you don't have to be psychic to do so. All you have to do is take a look at the culture of ancient Rome.

Their technologies are not the same. But their psychology is very similar.

Aaron Copland's, "Fanfare for the Common Man", helped me to realize the similarities between these two cultures situated — such as they were — on two separate planets.

I may not consider myself to be a true blue American since so much of our culture is predicated upon Roman culture — brutal as it was.

But I am saddened that I had anything to do with the destruction of Maldek. For, I did not possess the consciousness to prevent me from instigating a technology that was ultimately mismanaged after my death to the point of destroying that planet.

Now, what's left of Maldek is an asteroid belt between Mars and Jupiter.

And the only survivors of that catastrophe were the Martians who emigrated to Earth to form the country of Tartaria in the mid-Asian subcontinent prior to that catastrophe.
