Mastitis, blood clots, and elevated estrogen in older men, may all be related to iodine deficiency?

Who knows? It may be true.

I'll see over the next couple of days whether or not this is true. It's not a question of whether or not it is true concerning mastitis. That's a fact. But whether or not it's also related to the prevention of blood clots and sensitive breast tissue in older men is another matter that can only be determined by experimentation since I haven't been taking my potassium iodide of late and I never read about these other possible relationships. So, it's a distinct possibility.
