My mother died of ALS at the age of 74. This was five years after her diagnosis. We were both poisoned by creosote bush outgassing from the floorboards in her master bedroom due to the carpenter flipping the floorboards downside-up instead of treated-side to face downward into the crawl space beneath her single-story home.

BTW, creosote bush extract is used to varnish one side of particle floor boards drug for ALS that was merely intended to slow the onset of death. As it turned out, she was in the control group -- not the experimental group. Although she received the drug for free after the trial was finished, by that time her illness had progressed to the point that her access to the drug didn't help much.

I have recently learned how copper, when combined with zinc in the ratio of one milligram of copper per 15 milligrams of zinc, is involved with neuronal integrity. I was so impressed with my research that I decided to make a post about it to share it with anyone who cares to have a peek into our conversation.

To that end, please accept my apologies for not being a medical doctor and enjoy the benefit of hearing my story. I hope my mom can sit a little easier in heaven knowing that one less mystery needlessly lingers.
