Biblical Adam names everything within the Garden: what is that?

VINYASI
OCT 03, 2026

In response to:

> Ben
>
> that's not true, you can create things without a seed
>
> nuclear reactors do it all the time

A seed is only necessary if you don't have the form. In other words, if you don't understand the essential nature of the substance of which you desire to have a fragment (of its miniaturization), then a seed-sized sample is required. Otherwise, the knowledge of its form is enough. Thus, Adam named all the creatures and stuff he found in the Garden. He wasn't arbitrarily making anything up. He was recognizing their forms but in the vernacular of phonemic strings. It has taken me many years to cook with my Sanskrit name. It could take me an eternity to fully understand it. But, by and by, I come to know a little bit more about myself through understanding what my name is describing. This morning I realized that I, and the other members of my group of soul-mates to which I am attached, are portals to another group of soul-mates. So, we're a set of derivatives of another group. And one member of that other group (which precedes us) has been persecuted for his allegiance to truth. The other member stands aloof and apart from any direct involvement with the stream of Life so far as I know; so, he has not been persecuted (at least not recently). Yet, both are spokesmen for truth. My group deviates from that predecessive group by way of foolish pride in as much as we strive to do the opposite of what is common sense. Yet, we are engineered to evolve — not despite our foolishness, but — because of it. This is the meaning of the ‘nee’ syllable in the middle of my name (vee-nee-ya-asee) in which ‘n’ negates whatever comes before it, and the subsequent ‘ee’ progressively evolves that negation. So, we (the members of my group) can’t help but evolve even from making the wrong life-choices no matter whatever are the consequences of our foolish acts.